Burton Holmes' little journey through Rural Java is literally a triumph of "the land of the lovely out-of-doors," where man and nature have wrought ~~productive~~ miracles of beauty. You see this picturesque people gathering kapok, the unsinkable fluff, which stuffs our sofa pillows and our life-preservers. Farming this product is like working in a vegetable snowstorm. Mr. Holmes also shows you the cultivation of the chinchona trees, from which the greater part of the world's quinine supply comes. Rice cultivation is also shown; here, a native population of 33,000,000, ~~is~~ crowded into this island - - - about the size of New York State - - is largely fed on this one product. There is no more picturesque form of agriculture than rice growing, and therefore this little visit to Rural ~~Java~~, with the three agricultural industries shown by Mr. Holmes, makes this an unusually lovely "easy-chair-journey."
